内容	This is my first time to attend an international conference. While participating the conference, I was amazed about the experimental animals that other scholars used, such as seals and squirrels. It is impressive that these scholars had tons of brilliant ideas and put them into practice. I also had a chance to show my study to all of them during my oral presentation. This is a great opportunity to train myself to state or explain my research logically and clearly. The most valuable moment is I received feedback after my presentation. An expert suggested that I could try the same method on the control animal model in order to compare my current part more significantly. One of the professors gave me more guidance on my future plan. A scholar provided me his viewpoint, which I did not keep an eye on. These responses are meaningful that I really do bring them into my research and is going to give them a try recently.
